ABSTRACT

A survey of the teaching faculty at Central State University (CSU) in Edmond, Oklahoma, was conducted in February 1981 in order to determine faculty attitudes toward present and possible future services of the CSU library and to determine classroom assignment patterns which impact on the library. Specific factors surveyed included attitudes toward library staff, collections, and services; faculty need for books and periodicals; classroom and research needs; library use patterns; class requirements for library services; library assignments; attitudes toward library instruction; and preferences for possible future library services. The library staff were rated as performing well. Library collections were found to be more suited to students' classroom needs than faculty research needs. Journals and reference books were rated as receiving the most use for personal or teaching purposes. Upper division courses were reported to have twice as many library assignments as lower division courses. Only 15% of the faculty stated that their classes came to the library for orientation sessions, but 94% said students should be involved in library instruction. These and other survey results are briefly analyzed in the report. Also provided are recommendations for action on specific issues and a detailed listing of the results for each question included in the survey instrument. (Author/ESR)

REPORT ON THE LIBRARY SURVEY OF THE FACULTY

The purpose of the survey given to CSU faculty in February, 1981 was to determine faculty attitudes toward present and possible future services and classroom assignment patterns which impact on the library. Analyzing these specific factors will enable us to continue the evaluation of services more generally and plan future programs.

Present Services

I. Staff: According to the survey's respondents, the library staff has been performing well. Almost 93% said that the staff provides the information they need. More generally, the staff was rated as above average or excellent by 88% of the faculty (excellent--56%, above average--32%).

II. Collection: The library collection seems to be more suited to the students' classroom needs (teachers' teaching requirements) than to the faculty's research needs. Results were almost the same respective to either books or periodicals: 75% said books, 79% said periodicals were adequate for their teaching purposes, while only 57% said books and 58% said periodicals were adequate for their research purposes. Overall, the collection was rated only in the average to above average range (average--27%, above average--51%, excellent--14½%), but noone said that the collection was unsatisfactory.

III. Use patterns:

A. The following list ranks materials and services by use in the previous semester for personal or teaching purposes (the percentage indicates the percentage of faculty using the materials or services). Of interest is the fact that while the collection was rated relatively weaker for research, the interlibrary loan service, which is intended to augment the collection, was used by relatively few faculty members. Because of the high journal and reference use and the lower book and especially microform use (which represents the storage medium for older information), it would seem that recency of information is the most important factor in the faculty's use of the collection. This interpretation will likely vary among departments and schools and will require more in depth analysis.

Journals	76%
Reference Books	75.5
Circulating Books	60
Microforms	38
Reserve Books	26
Newspapers	23
Gov't Documents	17.5
ERIC	16
Interlibrary Loan	14.5
Curriculum Books	10
Cassettes	10
Children's Books	7
Maps	6

B. Class requirements: Upper division courses have twice as many library assignments as lower division courses. Book or journal articles, research papers and short term papers are the most common assignments, while library question sheets, annotated bibliographies, and statistical data are the least common. Correspondingly, students are expected to use journals (73%), circulating cataloged books (64%) and reference books (58%) most for assignments. Students more often have a required list of materials not on reserve (46.5%) than one of materials on reserve (35%). Students are infrequently expected to use the large microfiche collections, the children's, curriculum, maps and cassettes collections. ERIC (17%) and government documents (19%) are in between the extremes.

C. Library Instruction: Only 15% of the faculty reported that their classes came to the library for orientation sessions, of which 70% were conducted by a librarian. This seems to contradict their belief that library instruction is necessary: (1) 94% said that students should learn the use of the library, (2) 82.5% said that all freshmen should be required to receive instruction. 75% said that the students don't have these skills. The discrepancy is accounted for by the mixed beliefs concerning the methodology which should be used to provide this instruction: 57% said it is the librarians' responsibility for instructing the students in the use of the library, 41.5% said it is the individual student's responsibility, and 38% said it is the faculty member's primary responsibility.

Recommendations:

I. The staff are to be commended for their high appraisal by the faculty.

II. It can be concluded that the library should investigate the following actions in order to strengthen the collection and services where they appear weakest: (1) determine more precisely the research needs of the faculty, (2) acquire more of the materials needed through the development of a collection development policy, (3) advertise the interlibrary loan service which is intended to augment the collection and fill these deficiencies, (4) advertise those resources which are not receiving use proportionate to the capabilities for supplying needed information, (5) investigate on-line searching as a research enhancement (a process which has been undertaken this fall through a university research grant), and (6) look for other innovations which might aid the faculty in their research. These actions should not replace, nor be done at the expense of meeting the students' needs. In fact, though the response was more positive toward the collections' ability to fulfill teaching needs, there exists room for improvement. Therefore, the library should also determine the students' needs more precisely, and develop the collection accordingly, matched to the mission of the university.

III. The information provided by analyzing the faculty use patterns in detail should be considered when developing and enacting collection development policies and procedures. Librarians should work towards a comprehensive library instruction program (as is being done).

Possible Future Services

The faculty responded overwhelmingly that on-line bibliographic searching was their top priority among those proposed on the survey. Second priority was library orientation and information sessions for faculty followed closely by "current contents" or "current awareness" services. The complete list arranged in priority order is as follows:

1. On-line search services
2. Library orientation for faculty
3. Current contents
4. Library guide
5. New faculty orientation
6. Document delivery service
7. Library rooms for research classes
8. Faculty parking
9. Book drops
10. Choice cards
11. Study rooms
12. Research bibliographies
13. Class bibliographies
14. Publishers catalogs
15. Other services*
16. Other selection aids

* Among the other services suggested were: locked-up curriculum area, smoking rooms on the floors, museum-like exhibits, cleaning up the foyer and getting rid of the vending machines and computer terminals, CSU faculty ID to be accepted by OU and OSU, and computer lists of books and materials received by the library.

Recommendations:

Naturally, the library should try to provide as many services as are feasible within the scope of the library's mission within the university. Four of the top five priorities (on-line searching being the exception) concern current awareness activities, which seems to indicate that the faculty need and/or would like to have more updating information on the library's services, activities, and collection. Besides investigating the feasibility of offering the top priority, which is being done this year thanks to a university research grant, the most timely ways of keeping the faculty better informed of the library's activities should be investigated. A library guide has been produced and a new faculty orientation has been conducted. A newsletter, better coordination with the student paper (both of which are in process) and radio spots on the campus station and other innovative means should be investigated towards these ends. Surveys should be conducted periodically to evaluate services and discover new possibilities.
